3571...(From Jerry Eskenazi). I grew up in the time of radio's prime--just after World War II. I wanted to put into perspective the importance radio had on me and my generation, and how it helped acculturate many of us to the broader United States. Of course, it was also the theater of the imagination.

So I spent a year researching and talking and remembering, and came up with a radio memoir that also included interviews with some fascinating people. They include:

*My City College classmate and former Secretary of State Colin Powell, who speaks of doing homework and listening to the radio in his Bronx apartment.

*Tom Brokaw, growing up in the Plains, and for whom radio "might as well have been broadcasting from outer space" because he was introduced to worlds away from his isolated home.

*Bill Parcells, the no-nonsense coach and architect of winning teams with the Giants, Patriots, Jets and Cowboys, and whose earliest recollection was, believe it or not, "Baby Snooks."

*Mason Adams, man of a thousand voices (The Atomic Man on "Superman," Lou Grant's boss, Smucker's, "Grand Central Station," who remembers Clayton Collier with less than fondness.

The book is called "I Hid It Under the Sheets: Growing Up With Radio." It costs $29.95, and is available discounted, of course, online at Amazon and Barnes and Noble. Also at the University of Missouri Press (1-800-828-1894). The web site is umsystem.edu/upress.
